Five killed, eight injured in an airplane crash. The dead include Senator Cutting, of New Mexico, who will be deeply regretted by his state and by the Senate.

Flying in fog, fuel gave out. The last radio message was: "Fuel's getting low. We can't find a break in the fog. It looks like a forced landing." Both pilots were killed—they did their best.

An occasional disaster will not discourage flying, but this particular accident raises again the question: Should not airplane builders concentrate on parachute protection for passengers?

Would it not be possible to devise a giant parachute that opened automatically and would carry a plane safely to earth without shock?

King Solomon never solved any such problem as this: A New York manufacturer claimed to advertise "invisible panties," in usual words, small trousers, worn by modern women.

NRA rules say that if the article advertised is not invisible, the advertiser is "false and misleading and violates the code."

If those panties ARE invisible, King Solomon cannot pass on them, and their manufacturer must not attempt to display them on models, for evident reasons dealing with morality.

How are new religions born? We know how Prince Gautama, disgusted with his dancing girl and his easy life, left his royal palace and started the Buddhist religion.

We know Mohammed was convinced that there could not be more than one God—Allah—and that he, Mohammed, was that God's only prophet. We can imagine how other religions have started. The actual present-day start of a brand new religion in the Ninigo Island of the South Pacific is told by an old native, Aumanti, and that is news.

The Ninigos used to worship the shark and the man-o-war bird, combining that worship with human sacrifices. Then came a great tidal wave, and, says Aumanti:

"It became sick with fright, and the new religion was born in my stomach."

Many savages, you know, think that the stomach is the seat of the soul.

Details of the new religion are not revealed except as to the most important ritual, which consists of a great feast at certain intervals. This idea became instantly popular. At these feasts, some of the food is set apart for the ancient, disordered gods, just in case they should happen to have any power remaining.

Abolition of human sacrifice was especially welcome; the population was dwindling. The prophet and inventor, Aumanti, you will be glad to hear, is living. He's a god.

The government, after spending much money on relief in Illinois, has stopped spending. Illinois got tired of taxation for its share.

Now "300,000 hungry men" threaten to march on the capital. Seven hundred and thirty thousand Illinois families are living in want.

What would happen if the money were all spent, relief all exhausted, with property still remaining out of sight, around the corner? How many would march on Washington?

And would some future dictator rejoice that Washington, D. C., is laid out in such a fashion as to make it easy for a few machine guns, properly located, to sweep every street?

That was the idea when the Arc de Triomphe was built in Paris, the avenue running out from it, like rays from a star. The Paris plan was built when Washington was built.

Eight million young women in Germany are unmarried. The government invites 553,000 of them to marry "healthy, virile hereditary farmers."

To lead the unmarried German girl to the "virile, hereditary farmer" may be easier than making her marry him.

A labor law compels women under 25 years of age to serve one year on farms before they can take other jobs.

Once you begin to tell human beings how they must live, life becomes complicated.

Former President Hoover tells San Francisco that social security should be based on the "moral and spiritual life of our people." He says, concerning new economic security:

"We can find it in our tails. The slave had it. Our people

TORCH VICTIM QUESTIONED

On a theory that Frank De Stasio of Revere, Hudson torch slayer victim, was slain for his insurance, the questioning of witnesses had discovered that a $5000 paid-up accident and health policy had been taken out in De Stasio's name yesterday.

While these witnesses, some of them relatives and one of them the owner of the missing 51-year-old candy maker, were being questioned, police announced they had discovered that a $5000 paid-up accident and health policy had been taken out in De Stasio's name yesterday.

SOX IS QUESTIONED
It was revealed that De Stasio had a second life policy for $5000.

Those questioned included Anthony De Stasio, son of the supposed torch slaying victim, and nephew, Patry Nazaro, 27, of Yeoman street, Revere.

The grilling came after partial identification of the body had been made through the elder De Stasio's signet ring and a shoe.

Questioning was begun in Revere headquarters and then the witnesses were taken to the State House by Detectives Joseph Farrell, Edward O'Neill and Edward Sherlock.

A short time later Inspector Wilder Dillon of Boston police, an insurance fraud investigator, went into conference with Farrell, Sherlock and Captain Michael J. Barrett of the state detective force.

RING IDENTIFIED
Meanwhile, in Hudson, Police Sergeant John B. McPartlan had found in the ashes of the torch slaying sedan, where the victim's body was located in the rear seat, the large signet ring with the initials "F. D. S."

Relative identified it as De Stasio's ring, which he had worn for 18 years. A heavy work shoe, partly buried, was also found to be the same size as shoes worn by De Stasio.

The car also was one of two registered in Hudson.

SENATE O. K.'S VINSON BILL TEST VOTE

By Associated Press
Washington, May 7—By a 54 to 30 vote—less than the two-thirds required to override a predicted presidential veto—the Senate today lined up with the House in favor of cash payment of the bonus.

It substituted the Vinson cash-payment bill, backed by the American Legion, for the compromise offered by Senator Harrison (D., of Mississippi), in an effort to obtain legislation satisfactory to the administration.

The Senate must now decide between the Vinson bill and the Patman measure for payment by issuance of new money which was passed by the House.

The Vinson bill does not specify how the funds would be raised.

MUST PROVIDE FUNDS
The administration has warned that Congress must provide funds for any new appropriations voted beyond budget estimates. Secretary Morgenthau has proposed an inheritance tax as the best method of raising additional money.

Vice-President Garner announced the vote, administration leaders called for a vote on the Patman bill, but before it could be started, Senator Thomas (D., Oklahoma), inflation leader of the Senate, rose to talk.

He said both bills called for full cash payment of the bonus and in that regard were identical, but the Vinson bill would take longer to administer and the payments would be delayed.

POINTS TO DELAY
The Patman Bill, Thomas said, would refund all interest paid on loans since 1931, but the Vinson Bill would repeal all interest ever borrowed on bonus loans.

That, he said, would require long computations and delay the payment of the bonus for several months.

Senator Long (D., La.), who is joining Thomas in the battle for the Patman bill, supported this stand by the Oklahoma senator.

MRS. CURTIS GUILD'S SISTER, GIRLS DIE

Four persons perished today as flames swept the Back Bay home of John Lavalle, noted portrait painter.

Lavalle's crippled mother and two young women servants were burned to death. His oldest daughter, a child of 14, was killed in a leap from the third floor.

Two other children are dying and two other servants and two firemen are seriously injured.

Fire transformed the house at 353 Marlborough street into a house of horror in a twinkling.

Tragedy struck during the absence of Lavalle and his wife—in a household of five women, three little girls and a boy.

Flames trapped them on the second, third and fourth floors while they slept. All who did not leap from the windows, and one who did, lost their lives.

DEAD
LAVALLE, MRS. ALICE C., 60-year-old sister of Mrs. Curtis Guild, widow of the late Governor.

LAVALLE, ALICE LORRAINE, 14, daughter of the artist.

COSTELLO, KATHARINE, 22, a maid.

DOLAN, MARY, 26, a maid.

DYING
LAVALLE, ELLEN ELAINE, 6, another daughter.

LAVALLE, MARY D., 11, another daughter.

HAYHURST, HOSEMAN WILLIAM, Rescue Company No. 1.

Lavalle was in New York and his wife, step-mother of the children, was in Cincinnati, visiting her parents.

Fire started in the basement or first floor shortly before 5 a. m., while the nine occupants were asleep.

Death Over Train Delay

North Easton, May 7—If the Taunton-bound New Haven train hadn't been seven minutes late today, Thomas Jardene, Taunton railroad worker, would be alive. Jardene, a carpenter, had finished some work on the station here when the train was going to return to Taunton. The train was seven minutes late.

Thinking that the Boston-bound train, the "Whaler," had already pulled out of the station, Jardene did not look when he crossed the tracks.

He stepped in front of the "Whaler" and was instantly killed.

sweeping up the stairways. The elder Mrs. Lavallo, crippled by illness and unable to help herself, was burned to death in her bedroom on the third floor. Her grandchild, Alice, sleeping in a nearby room, was trapped there and jumped to death. Miss Costello and Miss Dolan apparently gave their lives in an attempt to help Mrs. Lavallo. Their bodies were found near her room. Ellen, Mary and John, Jr., occupied separate bedrooms on the second floor. Ellen, suffering from first, second and third degree burns, leaped from a second floor window to the sidewalk. Mary jumped and also landed on the sidewalk. She suffered severe burns and internal injuries. Both were rushed to City Hospital.

BOY LEAPS TO SAFETY
"Jackie" jumped and landed on a grass plot softened by the rain. He was only bruised and shaken.

Miss O'Reilly jumped from a third floor fire escape platform to a platform on the second floor and was rescued from that position over a fire ladder. She was slightly burned.

Miss McLeod, nurse for Mrs. Lavallo, also leaped from a window, landing on the sidewalk. She was taken to the hospital for treatment of slight injuries.

The beautifully furnished home, containing many valuable works of art, was destroyed. Furnaces and the costly loss at $25,000, but could not estimate the destruction of personal property.

No cause was established by the first investigation. Detectives Louis Pinkofsky and Salvatore DiStasio of the police squad reported they were satisfied the fire was not incendiary. They believe it started in the butler's pantry from a match or cigarette or perhaps from the heating unit there.

Miss O'Reilly told reporters that if the house had been equipped with fire escapes instead of mere fire escape platforms, no lives would have been lost.

Firemen said they doubted whether any more could have been saved, so rapidly did the flames rush through the house.

Between the first and second floors, and before the arrival of the first apparatus, spectators said an explosion rocked the brick structure—probably a blast from accumulated hot air.

HURLED 25 FEET
Lavallo was reached in New York within an hour of the tragedy and started at once to brace

Mrs. Guild, widow of the former governor, was notified at her Neaham home. She and Lavallo's mother were the well-known Johnston sisters, society beauties of the "Gay Nineties."

Lieutenant O'Brien suffered a compound fracture of the right leg and other injuries when he fell from the fourth to the third floor as a floor collapsed.

Collapse of another floor sent Hoseman Hayhurst, hurtling 20 feet. He suffered internal injury and a sprained left leg. Both went to the hospital.

The body of the child, Alice, remained unidentified for two hours after the fire until Miss O'Reilly, the cook, her own injuries treated, went to the neighbors' mortuary where the child lay beside her grandmother, to whom she was devoted.

For a time Lavallo himself was thought to have died in the inferno.

Lavallo's "My Family" portrait, life-size of his children, was among the paintings destroyed.

Most of his work is on exhibition now at the Grand Central Galleries in New York.

Lavallo has been in New York two weeks after painting portraits of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Julius Fleischmann, while with his wife in Cincinnati.

DISCOVERED BY POLICEMAN
The fire was discovered by Patrolman John J. McLaughlin, station 16. He saw flames suddenly break out of a window on the first floor.

He turned in an alarm at 4:33. Deputy Fire Chief William F. Quigley ordered a second alarm as soon as he arrived on the scene.

He said that the flames seemed suddenly to spring out of every window, and the four-story brick building became an inferno almost on the instant.

People were leaning out of windows, screaming for help, he said. Alice living in the neighborhood made sandwiches and coffee to feed the firemen as they reached a few moments off from the struggle to get their breath back.

Many of the fire providing coffee were Junior League and members of the Veterans of the Armies. Among them was Miss Marie Dorsey, last season debutante.

DOCTORS RESPOND
Dr. Freeman Andrews of 108 Jersey street, Back Bay, and Dr. B. Robinson, 205 Marlborough street, were the first on the scene and administered aid wherever it was of any avail.

Police Commissioner Mcweeney and Deputy Superintendent Martin H. King arrived at the scene at Crowds standing silent in the rainy down watch firemen battling grimly against flames roaring up through the Lavallo home in Marlborough street, Back Bay. Four persons are dead, burned to death. Others are at the hospital or on their way there. The gruesome and dangerous work of seeking more bodies in the blazing ruins is still in progress. Ladders at sharp angles against the building make climbing precarious.

most as soon as the second apparatus.

Other valuable properties adjoined the Lavallo house, but the fire was confined to that one building.

FLOORS RUCKLE
The sudden burst of flame which wrecked the complete interior of the house was difficult to understand.

Coupled with that was the way in which the fire shot flames as high as 75 feet into the air in one of the most awesome spectacles they have ever witnessed, firemen said.

The second, third and fourth floors buckled almost at once and crumpled in a stream of tumbling timbers and joists into the first floor, carrying everything with them.

Furniture, tapestries and other personal effects fell in flaming heaps in the center of the lower floor, added to the pyre.

Simultaneous calls came in to police and fire headquarters reporting the fire, which shot flames out over the street.

DANGER IN WALLS
One resident in the section told police she heard a woman scream: "Mary, Mary—see you all right? How are we going to get out?"

Out of the house, firemen and the dead woman, wrapped in a shroud.

On orders of the police department, Marlborough street, between Gloucester and Hereford, was roped off.

With the entire inside of the house burned out, the walls were believed so weakened that their collapse into the street was a constant threat.

OF NOTED FAMILY
Lavallo, Harvard '13 graduate, is one of Boston's best known artists. He studied under Philip Hale and Leslie Thompson and became noted for his portrait work.

Included in his exhibitions have been portraits of his aunt, Mrs. Guild, and of Judith Anderson, stage star.

His first wife was the beautiful Ellen Tuttle, who died in 1921. His present wife is Virginia Wilson Lavallo, daughter of Robert Wilson, multi-millionaire tobacco trader of Cincinnati.

His mother was also a sister of Mrs. Vittore D'Oriandini of Marlborough street.

D'Oriandini telephoned Lavallo after the Harvard Club in New York and then reached Mrs. Lavallo at her parents' home in Cincinnati.

At the height of the Back Bay fire today, a cameraman made a snap of a fireman with a broken leg. He was carried out by four of his mates after a back draft had hurled him against a wall. A policeman aids the injured man into an ambulance. Lives of four persons were snuffed out by the blaze, including the sister of Mrs. Curtis Guild. MRS. LAVALLO

JOHN LAVALLO

Tragedy had not yet struck at the lives of Mr. and Mrs. John Lavallo when the artist-husband and his beautiful young wife posed for this photograph in Lavallo's studio, where he was painting Mrs. Lavallo's portrait. Today his mother and oldest daughter are dead, victims of a fire which swept the Lavallo home in Marlborough street. Another daughter is seriously burned, and two servants lost their lives. Lavallo, informed of his bereavement, is hastening home from New York. His wife, in Cincinnati, is as yet unaware of what has happened.

Deaths Laid To Lack of Fire Escapes

Miss Molly O'Reilly, 24, the Lavallo family cook, who sobbed as she identified the victims of the fire, told reporters that no lives would have been lost if the house had been equipped with fire escapes. She said:

"I was awakened by screams on the floor below. I ran down and looked in the room of little Jackie. It was empty. (He had jumped.)"

"The smoke and flames drove me to the fire escape platform on the third floor. I tried to get to the coping of the next house, but I couldn't."

"Then I jumped to the escape platform on the second floor and firemen put a ladder up and took me down."

"If the house had had fire escapes instead of just those platforms, I think everybody would have been saved."

TWO FACE TRIAL IN ERA CASE

Judge Hugh D. McLaughlin, in United States court today, faced bill of $1000 each for Wesley W. Monroe and George W. Peasey, former local ERA administrators for Lyndon B. Johnson, charged with intent to defraud the government in connection with false ERA payrolls. Each pleaded not guilty. Trial was set for Tuesday, May 14.

are not ready to be turned into a national zoo, labelled and directed by a form of self-approved keepers."

Mr. Hopkins, probably, will answer that, in short words with long meaning. Our civilization may be a human "zoo" but when Mr. "Reiter" comes around at feeding time, he is welcome.

Dr. Barbour, president of Brown University, preaching in New York, says that unrest makes modern freedom worthless.

On the other hand, unrest, as Barbour well knows, is the creator of modern freedom and all other freedom.

It was unrest that established this government, brought the Puritans from England, and unrest that caused men to move up gradually from the ex-cort to the airplane.

It is unrest that will eventually bring real civilization. Dr. Barbour referred to a "dull restlessness." Even that is better than stagnation.

Pope Pius, addressing 130 German pilgrims, spoke plainly about Germany's present Hitler government.

"They wish, in the name of so-called positive Christianity, to de-Christianize Germany, and they wish to conduct the country back to barbaric paganism, and nothing is left undone to disturb Christian and Catholic life."

The Pope's words referred to the unpleasant welcome home of 2000 young German pilgrims that went to Rome to receive the Papal blessing.

BOY'S STORY OF FIRE

Little John (Jackie) Lavallo, 10, thought first of his sisters when screams in the fire-swept home awakened him today.

He could not get to them and jumped to save himself.

Unaware that a sister and grandmother had perished, Jackie gave the following account of his experience.

"I woke up with someone screaming. I could tell it was Miss McLeod, the nurse. I opened the door of my room and I could not see anything but red flames."

"I knew my sister Ellen was asleep in the rear. I screamed, but the more I screamed, I got choked with smoke, so I stopped screaming."

"The flames came into my room. I just had my pajamas on. I couldn't get to my sister."

"Then I opened the front window and heard the fire engines coming. I yelled to the first man to save my two sisters. Then I heard pounding on the front door below."

"I jumped from the window and landed on the lawn. I thought I was going to die."

"When I landed, I didn't dare to get up because I've heard about people breaking their legs when they jump. Finally a big policeman came along and said, 'Are you hurt back, son?' and I said, 'I guess I am.' He lifted me to my feet and I was all right."

6675 Seek 4 Billion JOBS

STAMPEDE ON TO BE "BOSS"

By Associated Press
Washington, May 7.—Lured by the hope of a job somewhere in the top organization that will run the four billion dollar work program, 6675 persons had filled out a blue "personal history statement" today.

Most of the applicants were "white collar" workers. They jammed a storeroom rented for the purpose of receiving applications after a horde of job-hunters paralyzed activity in offices of the National Emergency Council.

More than 25 clerks, interviewers and stenographers are busy all day with the applicants. Most of the job-hunters have bitters from Congressmen or "The Democratic chairman back home." Although no one apparently knew what will be done with the flood of applications, it was learned today that applicants were given a letter from a Senator or Representative are segregated. They also got an interview in addition to filling out the form—if it is desired.

A check today on the first 5000 applications revealed all the 48 states are represented, while two hopefuls listed Alaska as home and one Puerto Rico.

"Most of them explain they have to have a job right away," an interviewer said. "They say they have taken temporary positions in some hotel. Every few minutes some Congressman calls about the list from his home town."

First classification of the job seekers reveals half a hundred professions. There are doctors, lawyers, accountants, nurses and half a dozen kinds of engineers.

A girl clerk said: "Why, there are a dozen more than 70 years old that just have no chance."

The uniformed guard tried to keep applicants in line and moving fast, but it was one man against many.

RUBY KEELER Adopts Baby Boy

Chicago, May 7 (AP)—It's a boy in the Al Johnson-Ruby Keeler home. Miss Keeler, motion picture actress and wife of the stage and screen comedian, appeared at the Cook County building today to file papers for the adoption of a seven weeks old baby boy from the cradle, in substance, Evanston.

The prospective father-parent, accompanied by her attorney, left the building without disclosing what went away with her announced plan of adopting twin.

DAZED WOMAN Found in Roxbury

A well-dressed woman, about 34 years old, was found wandering about Blue Hill avenue near Quincy street, Roxbury today by Sergeant William F. Smith.

She was unable to tell who she was or where she lived. Sergeant Smith took her to City Hospital.

She is described as being five feet, two inches tall, with blue eyes, black hair and wearing a dark blue coat and blue checkered dress.

SUSPECT FREED of Holdup Charge

Two employees of the Weymouth Trust Company failed today to identify a 56-year-old man arrested as a suspect in the $22,000 payroll holdup in Dorchester Thursday.

'Tough' Roxbury Bandit Escapes From Hospital

Bridgewater, May 7.—Thomas J. Gilden, 27, of Roxbury, serving 20 to 22 years as an armed robber, escaped today from the State Hospital for Criminal Insane.

A guard discovered a grating outside Gilden's window in Ward F, styled the "Bad Actors Ward," had been sawed through and a large opening made.

Gilden was gone, clad only in his undershorts. The figure, apparently asleep on the cot was a dummy.

The red-headed fugitive, accused of a long list of chain store and laxative holdups a few years ago with Charles O'Brien, 27, of Hecla street, Dorchester, shared with O'Brien the police characterization as "two of the toughest characters in the underworld."

They were sentenced to state prison on June 8, 1932, O'Brien drawing 15 to 24 years.

Nearly two years ago Gilden set fire to a section of state prison in an escape attempt.

Later he went on a hunger strike, declaring his fear of being poisoned, and he refused to sleep on his cot out. He was transferred to the state insane hospital, where he had been since.

Gilden is believed to have stolen a hacksaw from workmen installing a sprinkler system at the hospital.

Small and slender and weighing only 116 pounds, it was easy for him to climb through the hole and to drop to the ground eight feet below.

Islered to De Stasio, who was last seen, according to state detectives, by his fiancée at 8 p. m. yesterday, although previously she had placed the time, they said, at 1 p. m.

Police also said they learned through questioning of the son and affianced bride, that DeStasio's planned remarriage only five weeks after the death of his first wife had led to quarreling with relatives.

SLEPT IN AUTO

It was also learned through an attendant in a Broadway, Revere, garage, that DeStasio had slept last Saturday night in the larger of his two cars, a large, streamlined model of expensive make, in the garage.

After learning of the marriage intentions filed in Revere and Boston City Hall by DeStasio and the Elvira Kelly, 38, of Sumner street, East Boston, also a candy-maker, police questioned her.

Miss Kelly, it was said today at Boston City Hall, called her alone yesterday and obtained the marriage license, the five days having elapsed.

The Revere man's son, Anthony, of Reservoir avenue, was closeted with Detectives Ferrari and Clark for two hours following the youth's return from Hudson.

NOT FATHER, HE SAYS

At Hudson young De Stasio declared he was certain the charred remains were not those of his father.

Sifted out of the ashes in the burned automobile was a clue that investigators were trying feverishly to use lead them to a definite point.

PAPER ALSO CLUE

It was a folded sheet of paper found in a partly burned pocket-book in the automobile.

The paper bore the name "Farrell" and an address "80 Joy street," police said. This is, in Boston, the Department of Public Welfare quarters.

What led the police to theorize that a Gardner man was the torch victim was the statement of DeStasio's son that his father, when he left home, said he was going to that city to collect some money.

Young DeStasio said he did not know who was to pay the money, only that his father had promised to meet him in East Boston last night.

'EGGS' JIMMY FOUND

Out of the debris of the burned car authorities today took a long bar of the type, police said, commonly called a safe-cracker's jimmy.

The torch slaying was of a particularly revolting nature. Authorities said from the condition of the corpse the victim had apparently been battered over the head at first.

Then, they said, the murderer or murderers had probably run the automobile over the man several times. That would account for the arms and legs both having been fractured.

The body was hurled into the rear seat of the auto and gasoline righted from the tank in the car was poured on it. Doors were locked after the match was applied.

Smith Rushes to Aid Man, Dying, Who Wrote "Sidewalks of New York"

By Associated Press
New York, May 7.—Alfred E. Smith, for whom the sidewalks of New York were childhood environment, gave a helping hand today to the man who enshrined them in the famous song:

"Boys and girls together,
Me and Mamie Burke,
Tripped the light fantastic
On the sidewalks of New York."

James W. Blake, who held the immortalized Mamie's hand and danced to hardy-gurdy music down East 11th street years ago, is dangerously ill—and "broke."

Word that he might die unless an X-ray diagnosis could be made reached the former governor.

"Someone should have told me sooner," Smith said. "I am extremely sorry to hear his condition is so serious. Send word that I will see he gets everything he needs."

Smith's personal physician, Dr. Raymond T. Sullivan, arranged for Blake to be taken to a hospital today.

"They were all real people in that song," said John Blake, while his brother lay ailing and drawn in a nearby bedroom.

"We were all real and so were Nellie Shannon and the rest. We all lived down on East 11th street in those days, near Second avenue. It was all different then."

Times have changed, too, for Blake, who was real and so were Nellie Shannon and the rest. We all lived down on East 11th street in those days, near Second avenue. It was all different then.

Disclaiming royalties that would have made them rich, they sold their work for $5000.

It was the only real success of 50 Blake songs.

BRUNO Hard-Boiled? NEVER!

BABY'S KILLER CALLED TENDER

By Associated Press

Trenton, N. J., May 7.—Bruno Richard Hauptmann doesn't want the world to think of him as "hardboiled."

His spiritual adviser, the Rev. D. G. Werner of New York City, telling of some of the things Hauptmann thinks about as he sits in the death house at state prison, said today Hauptmann can't understand why many think of him as "cold and callous."

"He has a tender heart," Mr. Werner said. "He often asks about his baby. He said he always looked forward to the time when his son could walk and talk."

"He regrets that now that the boy can do these things, he can't see him."

When he goes to the prison, Mr. Werner usually reads to Hauptmann from the Bible. Mr. Hauptmann told him yesterday, as on former occasions.

"If I had no faith in God, I couldn't stand this," Mr. Werner said. "He often asks about his baby. He said he always looked forward to the time when his son could walk and talk."

"If the truth had come out at Flemington, I wouldn't be here," the minister quoted Hauptmann as saying.

Mrs. Hauptmann, who accompanied Mr. Werner to Trenton, said she told her husband of Edward J. Reilly's suit for $22,358 for services as chief defense counsel.

She said Hauptmann commented: "Remember, Annie, I told you at Flemington Mr. Reilly was not for me."

Papa's Skill in Diaper Derby

By Associated Press

Chicago, May 7.—Mere man is coming into his own in a big way. His little one in an audience cheered, Herbert Beck, 28, changed the diaper of his six-week-old daughter Lynn in the elapsed time of 28 seconds, thus outdoing several women contestants in a diaper derby held in connection with a "Keep-the-safety-pin-in-the-month" school of thought in diaper changing, competed with 11 women, and while he didn't finish in the money, he did give the women a run for their laurels.

Mrs. Josephine Pieperkin won first place by changing the diaper of her six-month-old daughter Dolores in 29 seconds flat. Mrs. Josephine Barth was second and Mrs. Archibald Cameron was third.

Beck finished 28th in laundry service, 110 in cash and several lost jobs of dishes.

PEEK REVEALS ASSES OF THE WORLD TRADE WAR

By MERVILLE STANLEY RUYEYER

Washington, May 7.—The price which the people of the United States have paid internationally for the economic policies of Messrs. Roosevelt, Hull and Wallace was revealed here.

Recorded transactions prepared under the direction of George N. Peck, the President's special advisor on foreign trade, were photographed in proof.

Peck disclosed that the international audit was made public after he had discussed it with the President.

Peck's report shows economic and foreign trade policies instituted by the national administration as destroying the advantageous position of the United States as a creditor nation and reducing to the dependent position of a debtor nation.

In fact, the figures led Peck to recommend to the President a review of all national policies based in whole or in part upon our international creditor status.

THE FACTS

This adventure in simple arithmetic produced dramatic results in the subjoined startling interpretation:

1. That the outside world is riddling our creditor status, which at present, the two doubtful assets, namely, the defaulted war debt and the boom time valuation placed on American branch factories and other direct foreign investments.
2. That in 1934 Europe had sufficient free dollar exchange to meet its obligations to the United States twice over, but elected to use such exchange to repatriate dollar bonds or to add to their net holdings of securities of American enterprises.
3. That the assumption by Secretary Hull and Wallace that, if we increased our exports, foreign countries would use the dollar credits to increase their purchases of American agricultural and industrial products is not necessarily warranted, since in 1934 foreign countries chose to use dollar credits to buy securities, and took care of their cotton requirements by increasing export in Egypt, Brazil, and other outside countries, which offered lower prices.
4. That as a result of steady accumulation of American investments since 1921, foreign countries have increased their dollar holdings from 200 million dollars to 800 million dollars, and in American business is now one-third larger than in 1924 when we were still a debtor country.
5. That the monetary policy of buying gold freely at the increased price of $35 an ounce enabled the outside world to reduce its net indebtedness to us in hard currency terms, taking advantage not only of the writ of gold, but also of the offer of direct foreign dollar bonds resulting from defaults, etc.
6. That our monetary policy of acquiring foreign gold and silver entailed a surrender of interest-bearing securities for non-earning assets in the form of precious metals.
7. That by taking the precious metals, we supplied the purchasing power for our securities which had previously been given through the extension of governmental and private loans.

Weather Report

Prior to the publication of the Peck figures, we had to rely on the annual publication by the Department of Commerce of the balance of international payments, which was little more than an annual trial balance. Peck has supplemented these figures with a detailed account, and a capital and surplus account.

The report indicates that the previous official estimate of foreign holdings of American securities was vastly too low. The present figures on foreign holdings are based on an inventory taken with the co-operation of leading American corporations, banks and private bankers.

Prior to the McMillan commission report in 1931, British held adequate figures in her international position, but has subsequently improved her return, and has based her international economic policy on improved figures. The Peck report gives us a fuller picture of the American position than was ever before available.

The Peck figures disclosed that in 1934 American purchases of gold, silver and paper currency amounted to $133 million dollars, and were in excess of the annual necessary dollar requirements for the purchase of primary goods and services in the amount of $70 million. The present memorandum contains the estimate that this excess of dollar exchange was not utilized to acquire American goods and services, but largely found its way into our security markets.

OUR TRADE BALANCE

Foreigners used the 970 million of dollar exchange to purchase investments in foreign countries by $32 million net and to increase their investments in the country by 738 million net.

Our "favorable" balance of trade in goods with Europe, including the United Kingdom, amounted to $61 million, but was reduced to $27 million, if we include services and other "invisible" items to $27 million. (Capital account—purchased gold, silver and paper currency in the amount of $133 million net—excess of dollar exchange needed to balance the gold and silver account of $30 million dollars.)

Moreover, the Peck memorandum indicated that Latin America had a net "favorable" balance of trade with us, that is, a surplus of dollar exchange after all adjustments, of $115 million, yet, in spite of this, Latin America apparently required

How U. S. Traded Abroad In 1934

In the subjoined table, prepared under the direction of George N. Peck, the concentrated inflow of funds for (a) foreign trade in goods, services and securities is summarized. The table discloses precisely how we paid for an unprecedentedly large inflow of gold and also for silver and foreign exchange:

REACH GANG SOUGHT BY U. S.

Federal authorities are seeking an island stronghold of the Reach gang, they say, because they believe it exists because of seizures made at the Carl Rittell fortress-nation on Warwick Neck. The Reach gang is believed to have the Rhode Island or Massachusetts coast, when it was found some evidence of crime will be uncovered.

A radioing in code is being studied by code experts. Other seizures at Warwick Neck place with the truck used in the 1930 Pullman mob robbery—the same truck seized Saturday—and with a yacht which federal men refused to name.

The seized truck was at the federal building here today, while United States Attorney Francis J. Murphy, who is in charge of the presentation of the case to the grand jury.

John J. Cronan, who filed notice as counsel for Ira and Henrietta Rittell, requested Ford's cooperation to obtain a reduction of the bail of Rittell and his wife from $25,000 to $10,000 each.

Ford refused and the Rittells remained in Plymouth county jail, where they are held as material witnesses.

Levi Fisher, father of Joseph Fisher and John Fisher, both held before the grand jury this afternoon. His son is now serving a 30-day sentence in Cranston, R. I. jail for an auto violation.

Carl Rittell, 74, Carl Rittell's father, also went before the grand jury. He did not appear in court, but was represented by a "part unknown."

The Rittell family is a prominent one since his arrest in California. Investigation of the murder of Antonio Merola, Providence member of the gang, which at Wrentham before the federal grand jury.

3 Seized on $1,750,000 Chain Letters

By International News Service. Denver, May 7.—Three Denver men were under arrest today as the Federal government continued its drive to eliminate chain-letter fraud.

R. M. Barnhart, vice president of an oil company; H. L. Harris, a mining promoter; and Edward W. Hughes, employee of a packing company, accused of mailing 1200 letters starting 13 chains, pleaded not guilty.

The letters allegedly bore names of themselves and relatives and were mailed to addresses on mailing lists of Barnhart's company as well as to relatives of the others.

Potential returns would have been $1,750,000, "with about $750,000 probable."

STREET JOBS For 1000 on Dole

One thousand welfare workers will be converted into street cleaners as the Department of Public Works today announced that it will be taking on the job of cleaning the city streets.

Anticipating objections from those who have been receiving welfare without working for it, Downing said that any able-bodied man who refused to take a job would be thrown off welfare.

The decision was made after a conference with Mayor Mansfield, who said he had recently received word that Boston's streets were "disastrous and probably the worst in the country."

Airplane Crash Claims 5th Victim as Woman Dies

Macon, Mo., May 7.—Engines of the TWA all-liner which crashed here failed for lack of gasoline, it was indicated today as activities of the triple investigation widened.

Dying words of Pilot Harry Bolton were repeated before the inquiry board which continued its hearing into today. They were, according to Roy Nurn, a farmer: "I was forced down because of the gas' failure."

They were the last words of the crash claimed the fifth victim when Mrs. William Kaplan of West Los Angeles died of effects of her injuries.

The coroner's inquest was but one phase of the probe of the crash that killed Senator Bronson Cutting and four others. Eight more were injured.

Most intensive of the investigations was that of the United States Five Department of Commerce investigators acting under direct orders from Washington, were on the scene.

Orders of Secretary of Commerce Roper were drastic and definite. They were all facts as soon as they are ascertained.

Meanwhile the Transcontinental Western Air office had a corps of its own experts trying to determine what caused the crash.

First official statement by the TWA was given by Paul E. Richter, vice-president, who said the plane crashed, resulting in this regrettable accident.

It was announced in Washington that the body of Senator Cutting would be taken from Macon to New York, arriving in that city today.

Funeral will be held in New York City, the time and details to be announced later. Burial will be at Oakdale, L. I., where the Senator was born.

Lusitania Sunk 20 Years Ago

By International News Service. New York, May 7.—"Here comes a torpedo!"

Twenty years ago today, at 2:19 p. m., this ringing cry and a tiny speck off the starboard rail of the mighty Lusitania, heralded one of the greatest of sea tragedies in world's history.

A tragedy which claimed 1195 lives and became a factor in the world's history.

From 300 yards away Captain Walter Schweitzer watched the course of the torpedo from the Lusitania's bridge.

He "steered" the hit, then submerged his craft and fled from the horror of the scene.

YD CHAPLAIN ASKS PROBE OF METHODISTS

Methodist charges that the American Legion sponsors a campaign met counter attacks on two veterans' fronts today.

Speaking before the Lowell Lions Club, Roland K. Hayes, past national chaplain of the Yankee Division veterans, termed the Methodist accusations "lies."

The resolution condemning the Legion was "sandbagged" through the New England Conference at Lowell, Senator Charles A. McCreary of Vermont declared.

Calls for an investigation of Reds in the Methodist church were made by Chaplain Hayes. He said:

"In view of the fact that the New England conference of the Methodist Episcopal church at its Lowell conference last week failed to prove charges against the American Legion and other patriotic societies, and refused to apologize for lies, or to retract false statements against the Legion, all fair-minded and patriotic American citizens find the Methodist church guilty of bigotry, cowardice and stupidity."

SAYS "PINKS IN FLUTES"

"All God-fearing and patriotic American citizens who are also members of the Methodist Episcopal Church should immediately demand a thorough investigation or purger pinks in Methodist pulpits and pulpits in Methodist colleges and seminaries."

"There should be direct action at once if the Methodist Episcopal church is to be saved from the onsets of Communism."

Denying that the resolution represented the opinion of New England Methodists generally, Senator McCreary declared:

"I am confident that the resolutions adopted by that body last week in censure of the American Legion, as being a promoter of subversive doctrines, through its alleged Fascist tendencies, was through the conference by the concerted action of minority which presumed to believe that it represents the opinion of the good Methodists of New England."

RESIST ACTION

"Rather than a censure, I would suggest a resolution of commendation for the honest efforts of these men whose sole object is to preserve the ideals and institutions for which they and thousands of their comrades have staked with their life's blood the fields of France."

"The real patriotic Americans who comprise the Methodist Episcopal Church of New England resent the action of a few parlor-pinks as much as the rest of us who are neither Methodist nor Legionnaires."

GOODWIN FLAYS JUDGE COHEN AUTO CASE

Frank A. Goodwin, registrar of motor vehicles, today in a speech before the National Safety Council conference assailed Judge A. K. Cohen for leniency in automobile cases.

He charged the judge found a man guilty of five automobile violations, including drunken driving, and then placed four of the charges on file and imposed a suspended sentence on the drunken driver charge. He said:

"From the records I learned a man stole his employer's car and while in a drunken condition, was chased by a policeman for a quarter of a mile."

CHARGES FILED

"It ended with the automobile crashing into another car, badly damaging it. The man was arrested. But here are the charges and findings made by Judge Cohen in Central Municipal court on Louis Hicks of Wellington street, South End."

"Drunk, guilty, placed on file. Going away after damage, guilty, placed on file. Using without authority, guilty, placed on file. Operating without license, guilty, placed on file. Operating while under the influence of liquor, guilty, three months in the house of Correction, sentence suspended."

Registrar Goodwin declared that judges are no more lenient critics than the public of fields.

"How are we going to stop drunken and reckless driving if that is the kind of justice we are going to get?" Goodwin asked.

"It would seem to me the time has come when the judges and district attorneys should give a little thought to the innocent citizen instead of mistaking the discretionary power given to them by law."

By Associated Press

Kansas City, May 7.—A determined movement to strip the Southern States of their present voting power in Republican national conventions arose in the Midwest today as young Republicans looked toward the regional party conference in Springfield, Ill., June 10.

"This is the most important single item for consideration at Midwest Republicans," George Olmsted of Des Moines, chairman of the National Young Republican Committee, said, "and it should have a prominent part in the program at Springfield."

Opposition to the plan came, however, from Wisconsin, where young Republicans argued nothing must be done to create ill-feeling.

Terminating the system "a relic of carpet bag days," Olmsted said that "one of the most important steps that the Republican party can take in putting its own house in order is to return the control of the party to the hands of the people."

SOUTH'S G. O. P. UNDER FIRE

Norhampton, May 7.—Neighbors of Mrs. Grace Goodridge could hardly wait for her return from the South to see that bob.

And today, after they had seen the former First Lady of the Land, it took a sharp feminine eye to notice the difference of the coiffure "before and after."

Mrs. Goodridge's hair is actually clipped very closely in the back, however. Her wave, following the lines of recent years, camouflages the missing locks.

She had a small "pug" when she wore her hair long. The blank spot where that used to be was the only way those who hadn't heard the news were able to tell that something had happened.

Her how to fashion in, coiffure came after Mrs. Goodridge had resided the urge successfully for more than 15 years, friends said.

HOUGHTON'S SECOND FLOOR

This Is Life

ROBERT E. ROGERS

Our local Methodist conference's recent vicious attack upon the American Legion for its patriotism is only another example of the way in which the innocent "liberal" has been taken in by radical and Communist propaganda.

The whole procedure is so constant that it should be absolutely to do doubt as to what has happened.

The phrase "Against War and Fascism," is the clearest stroke yet pulled by these hypocritical Americans who believe in a revolutionary action.

The invention and popularization of it as good as anything of Huey Long's or the Reverend Mr. Coughlin's.

The Reds saw the opportunity Robert E. Rogers and they took it.

The thing started with the first Jewish protests against the Nazis. The Nazis, Tamm protests were actually speaking against Nazism not Fascism.

The Reds, however, saw their chance, jumped on them, and Italian Fascism and Big Business under the same name and sold abroad the notion that the plans of American business, the Chamber of Commerce, etc., were identical with those of Mussolini and Hitler's totalitarian state.

But that wasn't good enough. The magazine editors and the books about the munitions trade, made such a job of it that men gave them the opportunity of using up business and war and asserting that American capitalism must result in war—either piece of purely a priori propaganda.

Succeeded

Anyhow the Reds have succeeded in making a persuasive tie-up between Fascism, War, and American business.

Through their publications "The Daily Worker," "The New Masses" and their instruments, the young people groups, "The National Student League," "The Students League for the Democracy," and other such organizations of the innocent and immature and impressionable, they have spread far and wide this nihilistic "against War and Fascism" among people who are sincerely for peace and democracy, who are not at all economic and political radicals, who are not enemies, but who have been hypnotized by the false connotations of these two words.

It never occurs to them that any sober analysis of the phrase makes it clear that it is the Communist point of view.

It never occurs to them that a real American democratic attitude of view would phrase its slogan "Against Fascism and Bolshevism and War."

It never occurs to them that a really American and democratic point of view would have as a supplementary slogan "Against proletarian dictatorship, tyranny and terror, and underground wars fare against a peaceful people."

Wherever you see the slogan you will find sincerely liberal and idealistic people leading themselves in their innocence to a slogan manufactured in Union Square and intended not against the Nazis and the blacklists but against American business, American government, and the very existence of an American army and navy.

Ignorant Dupes

Down in New York on May Day the credulous colored followers of Father Divine, so credulous as to believe he is God, exhibited their weakness in other ways when they helped the Reds to demonstrate against our capitalism and our democracy.

Actually, they were demonstrating on behalf of the most highly armed and drilled nation in Europe and the least democratic of nations on earth.

No less credulous than these poor ignorant dupes of the Harlem demagogues are our local Methodists at their conference, with their harsh and un-Christian resolution offered by a from Los Angeles and sponsored, I understand, by the president of their largest assembly.

It might be soberly recalled to them that it is not impossible that the members of the American Legion are quite as Christian as they, quite as capable of coming to intellectual conclusions as to the nature of war and Fascism, quite as capable of formulating valid opinions about democracy and progressiveness and patriotism, and infinitely more intelligent in recognizing the source of their own ideas.

After all, one does not accept one's notion of what is right from a nation whose motto is, "Religion is the opium of the people."

So long as these credulous liberal and religious organizations deliberately range themselves on the side of ideas which find their original expression in the propaganda organs of the Communist party in America, they are actually spreading, by contagion, through young people's groups who may sincerely believe they are working for peace and democracy, the cannot liberate.

For such clergy the ironic proposal that ministers as well as teachers take the oath of allegiance is not entirely ironic.

JAPANESE TO CUT OUT JAPANESE ON TEXTILES

By Associated Press

Washington, May 7.—The Secretary of State was asked by Representative Edith Norton Rogers (R., Mass.) to appoint a committee to investigate the Japanese government's suggestion that Japan accept a voluntary quota on exports of cotton textiles into the United States.

The request was made at a conference of Massachusetts textile interests with the President's cabinet committee on studying problems of the cotton textile industry.

Mrs. Rogers said she believed the Japanese government might react favorably to the proposal.

"I feel that the Japanese government, anxious to maintain friendly trade relations with the United States, might be willing to cooperate with us."

After all, this would amount to a relatively small part of Japan's manufacturing.

Somehow, the Japanese government for the group which included Central Wool and Woolen Goods, American Wool, and American Woolen, Rogers, Wigwags, and others.

Accompanying them were several Japanese textile leaders, and spokesmen for textile labor, and industrial experts from various groups.

Ernest N. Hood, treasurer of the American Woolen Co., in Salem, Mass., and president of the National Textile Association, said his mill had paid $100,000 in processing taxes, or the equivalent of 30 per cent of the total payroll.

He recommended that the substitution be made to provide the farmer's benefit from some other source and declared:

"I cannot imagine any one legislator set who would work more to the advantage of the cotton textile mill and its employees and to the general public than to remove this process tax as now applied."

He listed factors adversely affecting the industry in 1934 and 1935, and in the order of their importance, as failure of the industry to regulate production to demand, was differential, the processing tax, increase of imports and loss of export work.

"As to the processing tax," he said, "it is correctly designated as being a superfluous tax imposed on the common necessities of life; on bread, on meat, on clothing, on tobacco."

Representative Rogers submitted two similar bills, one a Japanese product landed at New York after freight, taxes and duty were paid for eleven cents a yard.

The other, an American product was priced at twelve cents at the mill.

Jefferson City, Mo., May 7.—Governor Guy B. Park today granted Walter McGee, kidnaper of Miss Mary McElroy, scheduled to be hanged in Kansas City Friday, a delay of execution until May 31.

Pleas for commutation of McGee's sentence have been made to Governor Park by Miss Mary McElroy, 24, who said that in pleading for the kidnaper's life she also was pleading for her own peace of mind. McGee's sister, Mrs. Alberta Brewer of Kansas City, and his woman attorney, Miss Louise Knight.

The Governor has not indicated when he will make known his decision.

SOVIETS' MIGHTY ARMY, CHILDREN TAUGHT WAR

SOLDIERS GET GRAIN AS MEN STARVE

By R. H. SANGER

Harvard Graduate, Son of Colonel W. C. Sanger, Assistant Secretary of War Under Theodore Roosevelt.

Communists here strive to weaken national defense. In Russia they are building the world's largest military machine.

In America they oppose even the partial training of an officers' reserve. In Russia, men, women and children alike are being trained for war.

"Preparedness breeds war" is the Red propaganda used in the United States. In USSR a systematic program prepares the minds of all for an inevitable war.

GRAIN RESERVE

While millions starve, the Soviet built up a grain reserve sufficient to feed an army of one million for five years.

In two weeks' time the Soviet can mobilize and put into the field an army of 100,000 well-trained and well-equipped men, well supplied with sufficient materials to carry on a major war for at least six months.

A million "first class reserves" could be put into the field in a few weeks. Another million secondary reserves, mostly between 18 and 21, would need four months for completion of training.

THUS AN ARMY OF 500,000 COULD BE QUICKLY AVAILABLE.

And it is time the world realized that this is not, as the Russian war lords say, merely an army of self-defense.

Nor is there any truth in that other, propaganda myth, that there is no intention to use the army to spread Communism throughout the world. Military forces have been used three times for that purpose:

1—During the Civil War, Red forces conquered large areas whose populations definitely did not wish to become Communist.

2—French support of Poland—through loans, armaments and a training staff—saved Poland from invasion by Trotsky's armies.

3—For five years, Communist armies in the Communist provinces of China—trained by Soviet officers and in many instances commanded by them—have sought to enlarge their territory by ruthless and brutal aggression.

FEAR OF JAPAN

Communists in Russia admit there was great fear of Japan three years ago. The Japanese then could have driven them back as far as Lake Baikal. But they point out now the trans-Siberian railroad has been double tracked, grain reserves built up in Siberia, and extensive armaments have been established beyond the Ural.

Now, they say, they could hold Japan on even terms.

And in three years:

Countless new war supply and airplane factories will have been established beyond the Ural.

Then the Soviet will be able to drive Japan from the Korean peninsula. Then Tokyo and Yokohama will be smothered in a rain of Soviet bombs.

Communism will be established in Japan.

In this merely speculative war talk, one hears among certain classes in any nation?

Not at all. It was too general. When I, who had believed in Communism and in the "new pacifism," began to learn about the militarism of Russia, I said to a Red army officer that the Soviet could not have great war power while deficient in heavy guns. He replied:

"The printing presses of the Third International are our artillery. To be sure we are building guns as fast as we can, but the propaganda work we are doing to undermine the morale of the soldiers of the American, British, French, German, Italian and Japanese armies and navies is more important to us than whole batteries of howitzers."

"We don't need the army troops revolt. Let the capitalist powers build giant battleships; we shall have them when their sailors revolt."

In Russia, every factory, farm or office has its "Red Corner"; the posters urging workers to rally to the defense of the Communist state.

Here about once a week soldiers give lectures on care of rifles, gas masks, operation of machine guns, camouflage, trench warfare and other military subjects.

At Electrochemical last spring, a class of forty was being taught to fly.

It is not uncommon to hear two quiet-looking girls in their teens discussing the relative merits of telephone versus night fight for a

These young Soviet girls find their purpose in life of a more grim nature than that of their sisters in other countries. House and office work are all subordinated to military drill.

And we knew one mid-manned girl who, on occasion, would wax eloquent on the subject of bayonet drill.

WHEN A NATION IS TEACHING ITS YOUNG GIRLS HOW TO GET A BAYONET OUT OF A DEAD BODY IN THE QUICKEST POSSIBLE TIME, IT IS IN NO POSITION TO LECTURE THE REST OF THE WORLD ON DISARMAMENT.

Tourists have seen military displays are held in the various cities and towns throughout the country.

These are not dress affairs, but actual rehearsals for war—in full equipment, complete with cooking utensils, heavy boots for use in Siberian snow, each horse carrying its own supply.

After such martial scenes in the open air, the Red army workers had to listen to three hours of speeches on the glorification of the Communist revolution, and the spread of militarism in capitalist nations.

I thought of that last—and of the Red charge that America is "militaristic"—when next I passed the girl at the paymaster's table, urging workers to contribute hard-earned rubles that the Red army might be made stronger.

Moral pressure was such that three out of every four contributed.

No one knows Russia's full air strength.

In aviation circles it was claimed that the Communists were building more planes every month than their neighboring countries had in the field all told.

AT ANY RATE, THEY ARE TURNING OUT PLANES SO FAST THAT THEY HAVE BANGERS ENOUGH TO HOUSE THEM.

I have seen 40 bi-motor planes standing in an isolated field near Moscow, their motors covered with canvas.

The "specific" Soviet, advocate of disarmament for others, also has the world's strangest army.

Roughly speaking, it may be said that the Russian navy consists of 10 old Casar warships, 100 post-war submarines, and 500 torpedo carrying submarines.

I was aboard one of the old destroyers, and found it seaworthy, but in bad repair. But these old ships do not count.

What might be termed "the Soviet's suicide sea strategy" is based on reckless disregard of human life in use of submarines and tiny torpedo boats.

In the interest of world regulations, let that enemy ship regardless of what becomes of you, is an accurate percentage of the orders which would be given to Soviet commanders.

Some of the submarines are in the Baltic, others in the Black Sea. But most are to Siberian waters.

I met several travelers, who claimed to have seen submarines being shipped across the trans-Siberian, and others have been seen in parts around Asia by steamer.

The Russians are very proud of the new submarine base being rushed to completion near Vladivostok.

As for the "mosquito fleet," the theory is that if half a dozen of their 30 mile-an-hour speeders are sent against an enemy ship, a torpedo from at least one should find its mark.

If all are sunk, the loss would be only 30 men and about $300,000, whereas battleships cost tens of millions.

The famine-producing speed of the first and second five-year plans was primarily for the purpose of building up Soviet war power.

Away from big cities, I found most Russian objects bitterly to expenditure on armaments of money which might have saved millions from starvation.

But they cannot publicly protest, because of fear of the Red army and the OGPU. One woman expressed the opinion of most older Russians when she said:

"Every night I pray that your great United States will do us no harm. I am certain the Japanese and Germans before they come to deliver us from the Communists."

Art Exhibit Attracts Society Leaders

By BETTY ALDEN

AN ARTIST'S first exhibit is always an occasion of supreme importance to himself as well as to those closely associated with him... so yesterday afternoon at the Vose Galleries we were not surprised to find John Barnard surrounded by many members of his family and their friends...

A water color artist, with a distinguished career as an architect behind him, Mr. Barnard charmed his public yesterday with the replicas of little corners of the earth that are worthy of being permanently remembered on canvas... Cape Cod, so dear to many Bostonians, and Guatemala, familiar to those wanderers who enjoy the charm of the West Indies in the winter time, are the artist's particular subjects...

Mrs. Richard M. Saltonstall

Little girls in original Guatemalan costumes served tea and cakes to the guests...

Mrs. Richard M. Saltonstall, wearing a black dress with revers of white embroidered organdie, studied the paintings with interest and greeted many friends as she wandered from room to room... Mrs. Barnard, the artist's wife, in a raspberry chiffon gown with a sash of deep blue, was accompanied by her son, John, Jr., and several of her sisters...

Mrs. Frank Ashley Day, Jr., and Mrs. Seth Heywood very graciously performed their duties as pourers...

Priscilla Cornish, in a two-piece frock of lemon yellow, added a bit of color and gaiety to the bright color scheme of the tea room as she talked with her sister, Dorothy Cornish, and their mother, Mrs. John Cornish... The paintings of typical Cape Cod cottages and seascapes particularly appealed to this family group, which includes Centerville as its summer headquarters...

Miss Julia Hall in a chocolate brown tweed suit and Miss Hope Burchard were among the younger art-minded social set present... Mrs. John French, Miss Charlotte Allen in a navy blue tulle, Mrs. Butler Ames, Mrs. Charles Bacon in black and white, were others who dropped in for the occasion...

Mr. and Mrs. Donald Holbrook had a double interest in the exhibit... the familiar scenes caught by the artist's brush and the deft performance of their little daughter Jane, who, with Carol Close, was one of the youthful waitresses...

Mrs. Charles Lincoln Ayling wore a printed gown of yellow and black... Mrs. Henry Chapin in a gray tailored suit, Mrs. Sydney Harwood and Mrs. Bramhall Baker were also noted in the gathering... Mrs. George Dutton, Mrs. Alice Mandell, Mrs. Florence Close Gale and Mrs. Frank Close, all members of the artist's family, were present...

Premiere Attracts Many

SOCIETY'S THEATER-MINDED members added another to their many first night appearances by attending the premiere of "Parade" last evening... The audience appeared richly attired in silks, faxes, and jewels...

A constant devotee of the theater, and the Boston representative of the Theater Guild, sponsoring organization of "Parade," Fleck Hobbs was a conspicuous figure in the audience... A black colored silk jacket topped her white lace gown... Mrs. Franklin Hobbs' violet gown contrasted quite vividly with her daughter's brilliant jacket... They attended with a party of friends...

Evelyn Thayer was among the row fans... Black and white was the theme of her evening costume... a finger tip jacket of white silk over a black dress... Frannie Holmes' eggshell satin dress was banded with sable, and Mary Elizabeth Sears wore black...

Mrs. and Mr. Forrester Clark and Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Bancroft, Jr., were among the younger married couples there... Mrs. Clark wore a white jacket over her cocoa brown satin gown... A tailored blue and white dotted dinner dress set off Mrs. Bancroft's blondeness... Sitting nearby, Mrs. William Cox was with her mother, Mrs. Hugh Bancroft...

Mrs. Paul Clark in Spring Print

A BRIGHT SPRING PRINT enhanced the tall, graceful figure of Mrs. Paul Clark of Cohasset... Mrs. Samuel Newman and her mother, Mrs. Alexander Steiner, both wore black lace, as did Mrs. Carl Dreyer, who was escorted by Mr. Dreyer...

Mrs. Walter I. Badger, who seldom misses a first night, wore midnight blue lace with a short cape of the same material...

Finger tip box jackets were very much in favor as accessories to smart dinner and evening gowns... Mrs. Andrew N. Winslow, Jr., who was with her tall, handsome husband, wore a pale pink jacket of this type with an orchid chiffon gown... Both colors are extremely flattering to her fragile blonde coloring... Her sister, Miss Louise Condit, was also there...

Mr. and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller were also conspicuous celebrities there... Mrs. Fuller's white lace gown was enhanced by a white fox cape... Mr. and Mrs. James C. Dune, Mrs. Talbot Chase, Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Bradley French with Mrs. Harry Barrett, Mr. and Mrs. George Dunkley, Mrs. Charles S. Ward, Mrs. Matthew J. Whitall in a long and full black velvet wrap with bands of ermine, Mr. and Mrs. William Dana Orcutt and Mrs. E. Fred Cullen in a beautiful gown of gray printed satin with a larkspur blue taffeta jacket, were others present...

SPY—By Bernard Newman—Appleton-Century.

If the recent avalanche of spy stories to any criterion, these were more secret agents in the last war than there were sergeants.

And of them all, if we are to believe the author, Mr. Newman was by far "the top."

In his opening sentence, he declares that it is "high time this spy business was debunked and alleged that most of the spy stories have been the 'sheerest of fiction.'"

Be that as it may, Mr. Newman then proceeds to unfold a tale of adventure and daring which plots to shame even the most fantastic of spy memoirs.

Personating his German cousin, the author "escaped" from a British prison and became a member of the German Intelligence Staff. And, within a short period of time he was decorated by both King George and the Kaiser.

By his own admission, his greatest piece of work was in the closing days of the war when he succeeded in undermining the morale of General Ludendorff with his exaggerated pessimistic report of the dying "esprit de corps" of the German army.

It is exciting and absorbing reading, even with the author's gallant implication that President Wilson and a few million soldiers also had a hand in winning the war.

Hester Stephen's Bride

CHAPTER 11

(This is a serialization of the Cosmopolitan production soon to be released by Warner Brothers.)

The next morning, sitting at breakfast in the city's biggest hotel, he looked over the room to see if there was a girl here of the kind he sought.

The dining-room was filling up. Just leaving her seat at a table next to his, was a young girl, an American evidently, an inconspicuous little person in black.

His eye roved past her. At a corner table was a girl of the type he sought. He wrote her down for an adventure the moment he saw her. Rising, he went toward her.

"If you are not waiting for any one, may I join you?"

For a moment the girl did not speak, looking into his eyes, weighing him to see if he was worth her while. He saw he had won, as a calculating soul partner.

"My name is Mamie," the girl said. "And yours?"

She reached over, pulling his card-case from his inner pocket. "Stephen Chase? I'll call you Charlie, Stephen's too fancy."

All day they roamed about the city, but when evening came he had not asked her to marry him. "I'll be ready for dinner about seven," she said, as they entered the hotel.

"Awfully sorry. I've got a business engagement and I doubt if I can get back in time," he answered.

Finds Girl Lonely

At dinner the girl in black sat next to him. "She's not the kind to be traveling alone," he mused, observing her more closely than he had in the morning.

He watched her hands moving among the array of dishes which the Japanese maid placed before her. Delicate, expressive hands. A man would find rest under their touch. He felt his nerves relaxing.

An American family just entering the room greeted the girl and when she smiled back, he was surprised to see beauty come upon her.

He noticed that at such human contact some light seemed to kindle within her. "Why, she is lovely," he said to himself. "Almost as lovely as Lucy."

"I could marry her," he said to himself, "and not be ashamed." He rose and went to her, so absorbed that he forgot she might resent his coming without an introduction.

But she did not. When he asked if he might join her, she said, "Yes" very simply.

"Perhaps we could do some sight-seeing together," he went on. "Stephen Chase is my name. I'll give you my credentials. I live in Manchuria where I work for an oil company. I'm here on my vacation."

"I'm Hester Wentworth," she hesitated. "Can you tell me anything about your father and all he planned to do there. He died at sea," she added hurriedly.

"I'm sorry," she spoke rapidly. "We could go there—to Yokko, I mean—to introduce me to see the temples."

"I think we could," Mamie said, glancing up at him. "Mamie says his name as she passed."

Stephen and Hester Wentworth had left Nikko and their party, going off by themselves for a long day's mountain climb.

Visit to Temple

High, on a rock ledge, they found a small temple. The priests gave them tea and introduced them to the inner room. Stephen stretched himself on the matting of the priests.

"That is interesting," murmured Hester. "I don't understand it. It is different from our religion."

"It is," said Stephen. "I didn't know. I'm not usual."

"I play the violin," said the priest.

He looked at her with new interest. "I've often heard that since I came out here. Being away on such long trips—it would be hard to find."

He saw compassion in her gaze. Did she sense that he was in trouble? It broke her heart to see him so. As sometimes happens to the sensitively religious, she released his feelings poured itself out in a torrent.

He told Hester that he had come to Japan to marry a girl he had known in his life. That he had not come off. He told her of the days afterwards alone in the mountains and his reckless determination to go back married.

"You don't suppose," he said as he ended, "I'm not the same—but you do understand, don't you? It would be sweet to take care of you."

There was silence between them. Well, he'd done the wrong thing again. Women . . .

She was speaking now, her voice gentle. "I do understand

... Perhaps not all . . . but enough . . . I must think."

Without further speech, hand in hand they went down the mountainside. Hester letting Stephen lead her, too absorbed in her thoughts to watch her footing. To her own amazement, she loved him.

Her Love Strong

She was amazed at the strength of her love, what that she could love so easily. Then she drew herself up with proud reserve. Yes, she needed him. She needed him too much.

Yet think it must be no," she said at last. "It's not that I don't understand. I love you, I think. But there are reasons I can't explain."

She saw the stricken look in his face. All her inhibitions were swept away. She loved him, he needed her.

Three days later, they were married.

LESSON in midsummer charm—this dinner dress or printed seersucker with frosty touches of white organdy. It's an eloquent hasanah to the beauty of cottons, which is being celebrated this week, and to the perfection of Pictorial Review patterns. (To be exact, Pictorial Perfect Pattern 7797 was used.)

Celebrate Cotton Week With Around-the-Clock Fashions

By ANNICE BRINK

Fashion Editor

AROUND THE CLOCK in cotton—and we don't really need a Cotton Week at all at all to remind us how important that little vegetable fibre is—is made an even more interesting and complete cycle with the arrival of a red cotton nightie called "The Woman in Red."

Besides the charming story told in pictures above (cost-of-making figures are quite as intriguing as the fashions themselves, too), there are scads of smart new things on the ready-made market.

"The Woman in Red," among the new arrivals, is made like an evening dress, with low-cutting flares, an equally low-cutting back, and ruching and bow for trimming.

Working backward through the day we find an evening gown of gray finished to shine like a circé satin. Or if you have a penchant for looking cool and remote, a near relative to Gerda's Snow Queen, an all-white tulle and acid-dipped frothy design will lure you.

For afternoon, dotted swiss trimmed with innumerable val lace ruffles will do your bridge game good, and provide the tired Man with a feast for the eyes in addition to the one spread on the clicking cool table on the little north-side stone terrace.

You'll slip through the shopping in a fine glitsham shirtwaist dress, which is really nice enough to rub shoulders with anything else on a country club veranda.

And you will do your morning exercises and chores, as a dear friend of mine does, in a pair of X-length cotton shorts with a chemise-bloom, whose trimming which outlines skirtmaker details, is navy blue organdy. Or, if you're not the type and couldn't face the grocery boy at the next-door neighbor, try dark cotton pajamas, whose legs are swab-the-deck length. In the cool of the morning wear a cotton Breton shirt, or midday, if the morning starts out sultry.

All these nice things are really made at home, if you like to sew a fine seam with your electric machine. With the aid of such a marvellously up-to-the-minute pattern service as Pictorial Review offers, you can practically keep in step with New York and Paris!

Efficiency in the Garden

YOUR VEGETABLE garden is the one you plant as you choose, but here are a few principles from Hopsy Beaufort, which will prove helpful:

Let the rhubarb and asparagus be with the berries and grapes at one side, out of the way of the annual plowing or spading.

Let the early planted and quick-growing crops be together so that their space may be cleared up and replanted to a fall vegetable or sowed with green manure crop to plow under. One need worry little about the north and south-side of the rows. Whether cross-wise or lengthwise or a rectangle will depend upon how many things are to be planted and how often. Where space is ample, the rows or garden tractor and fairly well apart. The sweet corn is about the only thing likely to be cast much shadow, so put on the north side if it suits. If not, don't worry.

ANOTHER of the marvelous make-it-yourself group that has every notable point of the fashion trend . . . shorter, fuller skirt, pinched-in waistline, puffed sleeves. Made of turquoise blue sateenette, of supple-finished cotton, with the professional aid of Pictorial Perfect Pattern 7797.

Adele Garrison's Love Serial

Given in Marriage

CHAPTER 338

My brain felt as if it were a leaf in a whirlpool as I listened to the cryptic comments of the state troopers upon the Veritane car and Otto the chauffeur, and at greater length upon Ronald, my father and me.

What did it all mean—this farrago about "everything clicking," "the good-looking dame," "the blond answer to a maiden's prayer" who was her "boy friend," and the "old pappy guy" who had "thrown the switch" for Jimmy because he "wasn't in the picture at all?"

The troopers lowered their voices and moved a bit away from us, the tall one practicing his movement by rather ostentatiously laying his hand upon his hip.

"Don't go to thinking up any of your cute little schemes about flying the coop, sister," he advised genially.

I saw Ronald stiffen in impatient anger, also in apprehension for me—I knew the brave lad had no fear for himself—and I waited only until the man moved away to whisper a hasty reassurance to him.

It was an honest one, for I had experienced enough to know that the trooper was only employing justifiable bluff in his implied threat to use his revolver if we attempted to go away.

"He never will shoot," I whispered. "Pull yourself together, boy! I'm just beginning to grasp what this is all about, and we'll be able to convince him that we are not the people he thinks we are."

For there had come to me, as out of a clear sky, an answer to my query as to the reason for the queer behavior of the trooper, and I scored myself that I had been too dull to see it before.

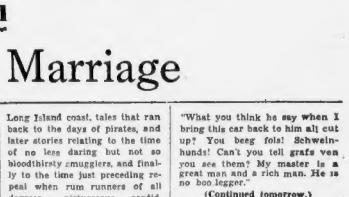

Run, runners! Bootleggers! That was the classification to which Jimmy and his fellow trooper thought we belonged, and that was the reason for their blustering talk of the numberless coveys and inlets of the eastern Long Island coast, later that ran back to the days of pirates, and later stories relating to the time of no less daring but not so bloodthirsty emigrants, and finally to the time just preceding repeal when rum runners of all degrees—pictoreque, morbid, some of them steeped in crime of a degree unknown in any other era—infested our lovely seaboard.

But the troopers were returning now, and I had to crush down my fears for my father with an iron hand, in order to leave my faculties free to cope with these men who plainly suspected me of being a flimsy rum runner.

"Well, sister; how about it?" the taller trooper asked. "Are you going to come clean and show us where you have the booze hid, or will we have to cut up the car till we find the secret compartment?"

"You will not cut this beautiful car of Mister Veritane's," he yelled, vaulting from the front seat as if he were a pole jumper.

A FREE ARM and an unhampered body stack out well for results, even with sun in your face . . . though you'd never know it, the tennis player made her own sure dress for active sports. Its comfortably modest front dissolves to nothing in back, down to the waist. Again, cotton, and Pictorial Perfect Pattern 7706.

WHOLE NRA ACT IMPERILED BY RAIL RULING

By Associated Press.
Washington, May 7.—New Deal lawyers embarked today upon a detailed study of the Supreme Court's rail pension decision to determine whether it had dealt a body blow to NRA and the Roosevelt social security program.

The aftermath of the 5 to 4 ruling wiping the plant pension paid off the law looking forward.

Some NRA officials saying a reading of newspaper summaries indicated to them that the court majority had touched on the relative wide interpretation of interstate commerce on which NRA is based. They and other study much closer this view.

High administration leaders indicating that the social security bill, now in committee in the Senate, might be revamped in the light of the new ruling.

The fact that which is called upon to contribute at the disposal of grounds.

That forcing a railroad to contribute to a fund from which pensions for employees of all railroads would be paid, deprived it of property without due process of law.

SEEK NEW LAW
That the "social purposes" of the bill were unrelated to efficiency and safety of operation and thus were not sustained by the constitutional provisions giving Congress power over interstate commerce.

Further, it was pointed out that the NRA act of 1933, which is the basis of the current law, is a "public law" and not a "private law" as the Supreme Court has held in a constitutional expert and "settles that particular case, but it is not such a guide for Congress."

It is not clear that the 5 to 4 decision, important when it comes to determining national policy.

DOUGLAS RAPS RED 'DESPAIR'

Communism, Socialism and Planned Economy cannot show America the way out of the depression, Lewis William Douglas, former director of the United States budget under President Hoover, told more than 500 at Harvard.

Appointed Godkin lecturer at Harvard, Douglas declared that property depends on new capital. Assailing the "economic" theory that machines make more than man can consume, Douglas pointed out that each new machine leads to property and not unemployment, he declared.

"The Communists or Socialists, or quasi-Communists and quasi-socialists, the Marxists, or call them what you will, allege that there is no such new industry."

"This, it seems to me, is the philosophy of despair."

Wild Beast Spreads Terror on Ship

"Hold That Tiger!"—Man Is Face to Face With Striped Death at Sea

By FLOYD GIBBONS

HELLO, EVERYBODY!

And today, fellow adventurers, you just must meet Otto Sondermann, of 25 West 91st street, New York city. Imagine a man-eating tiger loose on shipboard and you'll see why we pin the ten-dollar ribbon of the Adventurers' Club on Otto.

Otto was a sailor—some twenty-five years ago—on the good ship Haines, outward bound from Bremen to Peru. The Haines was a freighter and besides a general cargo she had a big shipment of wild animals from Carl Hagenback, of Hamburg, to a South American zoo.

An animal trainer accompanied the cargo and everything was done on board until the trainer got clawed up by a couple of searisk bears and went to the ship's hospital.

Then those animals started cutting up.

With the trainer off the job the crew had to take over his work. And, boy, oh, boy, take it from Otto, if any one ever tries to make you a nursemaid to a flock of wild animals at sea—by the way, the best thing for you to do is to climb up the tallest mast and hunk in the "crow's nest"—even then, Otto says, they might reach you, so the best thing to do is to jump overboard and play safe.

Well, Otto says, the crew naturally got nervous and the nervousness was communicated to the animals. Jungle felines do not take kindly to sea voyages, anyway, and on this trip they soon started to show their displeasure.

Day and night the ship resounded to the roars and shrieks of the irritated beasts. Sailors are naturally superstitious and they got so they would jump ten feet at their own shadows. One caged cat in particular kept the sailors on edge.

HE WAS A FULL-GROWN BENGAL MAN-EATING TIGER.

He seemed to be the leader of all the uproar below decks, so the sailors in their ignorance—decided to hoist his wooden cage up on deck.

And that, boys and girls, was a serious mistake.

When the ship arrived off Brazil, the caged animal went off their heads. Soft breezes from the South American jungles may have caused it. The tiger in particular went berserk. The huge cat refused to eat and drink and became five hundred pounds of snoring, striped demon, and the worried sailors took off a pound every time they passed his cage.

One night, Otto says, after a particularly hard day, he and his "bunkie" turned in for some much-needed sleep. The night was one of those close, humid, warm ones encountered in tropical waters. The moon was shining brightly, but not a breath stirred—perfect hurricane weather. But the sailors didn't mind that. They would have preferred ten hurricanes to those howling devils on board. Otto and his bunkie left their door open in order to catch a breath of air.

And that was another serious mistake.

Otto climbed waddle into the upper berth—he says he caused his bunkie to go to sleep up there on such a hot night—but he soon learned he was in for some much-needed sleep.

Such is being slated between nine o'clock and the clock and half after. For my concern, I would not miss their dry drolery for a lull.

Both happen to be holding forth in the flesh on Kansas City way, where Frank Churchill's fiction character "Kitty News" on live radio. The lyric legend, who lives the life of a professional realist when it comes to rural characterizations, his well known live radio characterizations, his stage monologues, and his stage monologues, have brought him international fame as a "chick" of stage, screen and radio. Certainly his claim to the distinction of being the most successful of all writers.

LABOR SECRETARY CONFIDENT

By MERRYLE STANLEY RUCKEYER (Copyright, 1935, by Universal Service)

Washington, May 7.—The rise in production thus far this year has been paid for by improvement in names on payrolls and in aggregate distributions to labor.

Miss Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, in chatting with me, derived confidence from her reports showing that for four successive months there had been a gain in labor statistics.

She pointed out that the gain in December and January were counter-seasonal. In April, Miss Perkins indicated that the preliminary data indicated a less than normal seasonal recession in employment.

Incidentally, a group of government statisticians in the ranks who a month ago were predicting a greater than seasonal decline before the summer now are beginning to back water.

The stellar automobile industry has been performing better than they expected.

Miss Perkins is convinced from the record that recovery is under way.

In view of this, she is wholly out of sympathy with the Chamber of Commerce of the United States to postpone action on her part reform, the social security bill.

Miss Perkins expressed the view that the ideal time to begin to accumulate a reserve fund is when business is improving, and the hazard is farthest away.

She pointed out that the bill carried a graduated tax, starting at 1 per cent and gradually increasing up to three.

Her contention is the fact that the first imposed does not start until 1936 and is not payable until 1937.

To postpone accumulating a fund now in Miss Perkins' opinion would entail placing too heavy a tax on industry later.

The secretary of labor, since the Brookings Institution has advised the NRA, has gathered statistics supporting the view that the government in the buying power of employed labor in the last two years.

Miss Perkins indicated that the Brookings Institution had advised the NRA, has gathered statistics supporting the view that the government in the buying power of employed labor in the last two years.

Miss Perkins said that the assumption had not been proved to the satisfaction of economists.
